1. The Malz yard has a work force of about 165 men. It was reconstructed about three years ago. There are two drydocks and one slip installation. Under the direction of the General Shipping Trust, it repairs steamships on the slip and smaller craft in the drydocks. At the most, new construction would be limited to boats and pontoons for engineers. Construction including any complex engines would be impossible because of the lack of skilled hands.
2. The governors in use at the Wismar shipyard are manufactured by EKM of Halberstadt (formerly Junkers).
